

APPELLATE

Initially, appellate representation supplemented the firm's trial work in defense of personal injury and medical malpractice litigation. The firm's appellate expertise and achievements began attracting clients who asked that the firm represent them in appeals from cases that had been tried by other firms.

Thoroughness and well-reasoned persuasive writing are crucial to successful advocacy at the appellate level. Such work requires a high level of analytical skill and writing ability in order to prevail consistently on appeal.

The rare combination of substantial trial experience and the mastery of appellate research writing and oral argument has proven especially effective in serving the full range of litigation needs of the firm's clients.

Clients appreciate the fact that if their case involves an appeal, the firm can handle it without the need of involving another law firm, which is inherently more time-consuming and expensive.
